S6 2010f OCLC Number: (OCoLC)653103699 Subject: Internet -- Economic aspects -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 9 broadband were tools that we used to drive down the cost of pro-viding our service, and soon other companies used these same tools. Today we are focusing on efficiency, growing quickly and optimizing our processes, but ultimately it is the consumers of our service, local law enforcement agencies, that are the clear winners in this textbook competitive market, where private companies are working to create the most value at the lowest price. By any measure, widespread access to broadband is an accel-erator to efficiency. Those economies that achieve the highest level of broadband penetration will be the first to create the new efficient services that will take advantage of these high capacity net-works and will have an advantage in the long run. Observation number three, widespread access to broadband is a proxy for other types of investments in the economy. Part of the mandate of government is to foster conditions that will contribute to a strong and vibrant economy. During the economic downturn, much of the focus has been on stabilizing components of the economy whose failure would have had catastrophic consequences. Substantial resources have also been devoted to creating economic stimulus through various fiscal and monetary policies, including direct investment in key indus-tries, and in many cases directly in specific companies. Unlike other types of investment, renewed commitment to and investment in broadband is more like lowering interest rates. It is meaningful to all players and simply accelerates the timeline to-ward greater efficiency and innovation. Observation number four, widespread access to broadband is a driver in open, participatory government, as the President has...
