Seminar paper from the year 2009 in the subject English - Literature, Works, grade: 1, 0, University of Gttingen (SEP), course: Representation of History in Contemporary British and Postcolonial Literature, language: English, abstract: . . . A reviewer once has called Alias Grace the doctoral dissertation that Atwood did not complete, a tour de force rendition of nineteenth century Canadian social life. In fact, the authoress had done some proper historical research, and definitely the better part of the novels attraction emanates from its basis in the truth, and the sheer impossibility of tracking down that truth. The title itself already alludes to the difficulty of finding out the true identity of the historical person Grace Marks: The title signals a disturbing absence of the original behind the name. . . . This novel recognizes that no written . . . history allows either the real womens voice nor the true story of the past to be recovered. The traditional modernist view of history depends on a belief in and a pursuit of objectivity. In her novels, Atwood often challenges these modernist views. As a consequence,...
